Read the passage and answer the questions that follow.

Subhas Chandra Bose stands as one of the most dynamic and assertive leaders in India's struggle for independence. He believed that political freedom could not be achieved without strong resistance against colonial rule. Unlike moderate leaders who preferred constitutional methods, Bose advocated for a more assertive and militant approach to overthrowing British authority. His leadership qualities were evident during his tenure as the President of the Indian National Congress, although ideological differences led him to eventually part ways with the organization. Bose's vision extended beyond mere political independence; he sought to establish a nation grounded in discipline, unity, and social equality. His formation of the Indian National Army (INA) marked a significant phase in the freedom movement, as it aimed to mobilize Indians both within the country and abroad to actively participate in the liberation struggle. Through his famous slogan, "Give me blood, and I will give you freedom," he inspired countless individuals to join the cause with renewed vigour. Bose continued to organize and galvanize support against British rule. His strategic alliances and international efforts highlighted his global outlook and pragmatic approach to resistance.
