(a) 15 m
(b) $10\sqrt{3}m$
(c) 30 m
(d) $15\sqrt{3}m$

Ans.(b)

Q59. A tangent PQ is drawn from point P to a circle with center O. If OP = 25 cm and the radius is 7 cm, find the length of the tangent PQ.
(a) 18 cm
(b) 24 cm
(c) 32 cm
(d) 20 cm
Ans.(b)

Q60. Find the equation of the perpendicular bisector of the line segment joining points (1, 5) and (5, 9).
(a) y = –x + 10
(b) y = x + 4
(c) y = –x + 14
(d) y = x – 4
Ans.(a)

Q61. Given a + b + c = 0, and $a^3 + b^3 + c^3 = 3abc$, evaluate $(a–b)^3 + (b–c)^3 + (c–a)^3$.
(a) 0
(b) 9(a-b)(b-c)(c-a)
(c) 27abc
(d) 3(a-b)(b-c)(c-a)
Ans.(d)

Q62. Sector A has a radius of 10 cm and a central angle of 120°. Sector B has the same radius but a central angle of (π /3) radians. What is the ratio of the area of Sector A to the area of Sector B?
(a) 1:2
(b) 2:1
(c) 3:1
(d) 1:1
Ans.(b)

Q63. A woman invests ₹20,000. She lends one part to A for 2 years at 8% per annum SI and the rest to B for 2 years at 12% per annum SI. If the total interest from both is ₹4,160, find the amount lent to A.
(a) ₹6,000
(b) ₹8,000
(c) ₹12,000
(d) ₹14,000
Ans.(b)

Q64. If $\tan A = \frac{x}{x+1}$ find $\sec^2 A$.
(a) $\frac{x^2+(x+1)^2}{(x+1)^2}$
(b) $\frac{x^2+1}{x^2}$
(c) $\frac{2x^2+2x+1}{x^2+1}$
(d) 1
Ans.(a)

Q65. From an external point M, two tangents MA and MB are drawn to a circle of radius 6 cm. If the angle between the tangents is 90°, find the distance of point M from the center of the circle.
(a) 12 cm
(b) $6\sqrt{3}cm$
(c) $6\sqrt{2}cm$
(d) 6 cm
Ans.(c)

Q66. A cube of side 10 cm is to be sliced into 125 small, equal cubes. What is the minimum number of cuts required?
(a) 12
(b) 15
(c) 124

Q82. What central function did English serve in colonial India, as per the passage?
Read the following passage and answer the questions based on the passage:
Language has seldom been a neutral medium of exchange; in colonial India, it operated as a mechanism of power, ideology, and selfhood. The British regime, while ostensibly pursuing education and reform, carefully engineered linguistic hierarchies to consolidate dominance. English, installed as the official language of administration and law, was not merely functional—it became a marker of intellectual authority and upward mobility. Indigenous tongues, by contrast, were deliberately downgraded, splintered, and rebranded as "vernaculars," a label that quietly implied provincialism and lesser worth. The enforcement of English education through Macaulay's Minute of 1835 was not simply an academic shift; it was a strategic cultural project. The cultivation of Indians who were, in Macaulay's phrase, "Indian in blood and colour, but English in taste," reflected a form of linguistic hegemony aimed at internalizing colonial norms. English became the channel through which many were trained to evaluate themselves and their traditions through imperial rationality, often producing estrangement from indigenous ways of knowing.
At the same time, colonial policy toward regional languages was deeply inconsistent. Although British officials promoted the codification of Indian languages, this process frequently drained them of oral flexibility and lived cultural nuance. Sanskrit and Persian, once symbols of prestige, were steadily displaced, while Hindi and Urdu turned into sites of political and communal rivalry—each advanced by different groups, thereby sharpening social cleavages. This reordering of language served two ends: administrative convenience and the dilution of resistance. A society fractured along linguistic and communal lines was easier to manage. Moreover, proficiency in English became a gatekeeping device for bureaucratic entry and economic advancement, embedding inequality within colonial modernity itself. In short, language under empire was never only about words—it was about access, allegiance, and authority. Even after Independence, the residues of this linguistic stratification continue to echo in schooling, social mobility, and persistent debates over language and identity.

(a) Strengthening regional harmony
(b) Sustaining oral traditions
(c) Validating colonial authority and ideology
(d) Reviving indigenous languages

Ans.(c)

Q83. What does the passage suggest by labelling native tongues as "vernaculars"?

Read the following passage and answer the questions based on the passage:

Language has seldom been a neutral medium of exchange; in colonial India, it operated as a mechanism of power, ideology, and selfhood. (a) They were treated as prestigious languages
(b) They were regarded as equivalent to English
(c) They were celebrated for elite usage
(d) They were framed as inferior or provincial

Ans.(d)

Q84. Why does the passage consider Macaulay's Minute of 1835 especially important?

Read the following passage and answer the questions based on the passage:

Language has seldom been a neutral medium of exchange; in colonial India, it operated as a mechanism of power, ideology, and selfhood. The British regime, while ostensibly pursuing education and reform, carefully engineered linguistic hierarchies to consolidate dominance. Read the following passage and answer the questions based on the passage:

Language has seldom been a neutral medium of exchange; in colonial India, it operated as a mechanism of power, ideology, and selfhood. The British regime, while ostensibly pursuing education and reform, carefully engineered linguistic hierarchies to consolidate dominance. English, installed as the official language of administration and law, was not merely functional—it became a marker of intellectual authority and upward mobility. Indigenous tongues, by contrast, were deliberately downgraded, splintered, and rebranded as "vernaculars," a label that quietly implied provincialism and lesser worth. The enforcement of English education through Macaulay's Minute of 1835 was not simply an academic shift; it was a strategic cultural project. The cultivation of Indians who were, in Macaulay's phrase, "Indian in blood and colour, but English in taste," reflected a form of linguistic hegemony aimed at internalizing colonial norms. English became the channel through which many were trained to evaluate themselves and their traditions through imperial rationality, often producing estrangement from indigenous ways of knowing.

At the same time, colonial policy toward regional languages was deeply inconsistent. Although British officials promoted the codification of Indian languages, this process frequently drained them of oral flexibility and lived cultural nuance. Sanskrit and Persian, once symbols of prestige, were steadily displaced, while Hindi and Urdu turned into sites of political and communal rivalry—each advanced by different groups, thereby sharpening social cleavages. This reordering of language served two ends: administrative convenience and the dilution of resistance. A society fractured along linguistic and communal lines was easier to manage. Moreover, proficiency in English became a gatekeeping device for bureaucratic entry and economic advancement, embedding inequality within colonial modernity itself. In short, language under empire was never only about words—it was about access, allegiance, and authority. Even after Independence, the residues of this linguistic stratification continue to echo in schooling, social mobility, and persistent debates over language and identity.

(a) English was avoided in governance
(b) Persian was promoted above all languages
(c) Codification protected every cultural nuance
(d) Codification often erased oral and cultural subtleties

Ans.(d)
